

Coping Strategy Push Notifications

Tools for the Tough Days

Ten push notification variations for each of the eight coping strategy options members select during onboarding. These are periodic nudges tied to the member's chosen strategy, not linked to a mood score or check-in time.

Working assumptions: push notification length (short, one line), general rotation rather than a fixed sequence, and matched to the platform's existing warm, direct, clinically grounded voice. Happy to adjust length, cadence or tone once reviewed.

Walking or getting outside

1. Taking a few minutes to go outside today could be worth more than you think.
2. Have you got some fresh air today? Even five minutes can make a huge difference if done consistently.
3. When did you last just walk, no destination, no purpose, just get outside and be?
4. If your body has been sitting a lot today it would be a really good idea to go for a walk.
5. Nature does not fix everything, but even a few minutes outside can shift things when done regularly.
6. Why don't you go for a short walk today. No pressure, just movement and air, it can make a real difference.
7. Have you taken notice what is outside your window? Take a few minutes to reset.
8. Getting outside for ten minutes rarely makes a day worse. So I would encourage you to do that regularly.
9. Sometimes clarity shows up somewhere between your front door and the end of the street.
10. You said walking helps. Today might be a good day to test that.

Exercise

1. An exercise session helps more than just the body. It also makes things better mentally.
2. Even a short workout can shift how the rest of the day feels. Why don't you do just 3 minutes today?
3. Your energy might come back faster than you expect, once you start moving and exercising.

4. Some days the workout is the easiest part of the day. Today could be one of those days. It can really help shift things.
5. A run, a lift, a game, whatever moves you counts. Don't let today go by without that.
6. Movement does not have to be big to make a difference. Even a few minutes per day can make a huge difference over time.
7. Notice how different you feel after you exercise or move, compared to before.
8. Twenty minutes of exercise can help you feel better.
9. Sore muscles fade. The mental benefits often sticks around for a lot longer.
10. If today feels heavy, moving your body might be worth trying first. Just go for a 5 minute walk.

Music

1. Listen to your favourite song, because it can shift a mood surprisingly fast.
2. What is the last track that actually moved something in you? Go play that now and just let the music give you some energy.
3. Music does not need your full attention to do its work. Even having it in the background can help.
4. Play something loud, or something quiet. Either way, notice what changes internally when you do this regularly.
5. Dancing badly in your kitchen is a fun way to move.
6. If your day is difficult today, a song might be just what the Doctor ordered.
7. Ten minutes with headphones can be a decent reset.
8. Some days call for the sad song. Some days call for the loud one. Use music to help shift your mood.
9. Playing an instrument, even badly, still gives your mind somewhere else to go.
10. A familiar song can bring you back to yourself faster than most things.

Talking to someone

1. A five minute conversation can help more sometimes than you would expect.
2. Is there someone you have been meaning to call back? Call them now!
3. You do not need the right words. Just reaching out is often enough.
4. Saying it out loud to someone you trust tends to make the problem more manageable.
5. Today might be a good day to let someone know how you are actually going.
6. Reaching out to someone with a short message can make a difference.
7. Most people would rather hear from you than wonder how you are doing.

- 8. You do not have to carry today on your own. Call someone you trust and be honest about how you are going.
- 9. Sometimes the people closest to you are waiting for you to go first.
- 10. Talking it through with someone does not need to solve anything to help. But it can make a difference in your day.

Reading or watching something

- 1. An hour with a book or a show you love is not wasted time. You need to give back to you.
- 2. Sometimes the best thing to do with a hard day is get lost in someone else's story for a while.
- 3. Whatever you are reading or watching, let it actually have your attention today. This will reduce the internal noise in your head.
- 4. A familiar film can be as powerful to settle you as anything else on this list.
- 5. Ten pages tonight might be enough to shift your headspace. Go read that book even for a little bit.
- 6. Getting absorbed in something else for a while is not avoiding, it is resting and helping you reset.
- 7. What is something you have been meaning to start reading or watching? Today could be the day.
- 8. A good story can hold your attention long enough to give your mind a break.
- 9. Revisiting an old favourite can feel like a small kind of comfort. So go get that old book.
- 10. Losing an hour to a book or a screen is sometimes exactly what is needed. Just make sure it makes you feel better.

Quiet time alone

- 1. A few minutes of doing absolutely nothing is not laziness. It is like recharging the batteries.
- 2. Sometimes stillness gives your mind room to actually reset and calm down.
- 3. You do not need a reason to sit quietly for a while today. Just take 3 minutes now.
- 4. Slow your breathing down for sixty seconds and notice what shifts. You may need to do that a few times before you notice something shifting.
- 5. Rest is not something you earn. It is something you need.
- 6. Have you taken a quiet moment alone, no phone, no noise today?
- 7. Some days the most useful thing you can do is nothing at all.
- 8. Give yourself permission to just sit with things for a bit today.

9. Stillness can be uncomfortable at first. Stay with it a little longer than usual and you will notice something shift internally.

10. A few slow breaths will not fix everything, but they don't make things worse.

Something creative

1. Making something, anything, because it will tend to quiet a busy mind.

2. You do not need to be good at doing something for it to help you. So just do something you enjoy now.

3. Cooking something from scratch today could be its own kind of reset.

4. Writing a few lines, even messy ones, can get things out of your head.

5. Creative time does not need a purpose or an audience. You deserve to take time for you.

6. What is something you used to make just for fun when you were younger? Go do that again.

7. A messy attempt at doing something fun still counts as making something.

8. Today might be a good day to put your hands on something instead of your phone.

9. Whatever you create today does not need to be shown to anyone. Use it to help ground you.

10. Making something with your hands can be surprisingly grounding.

Sticking to a routine

1. Some days the routine is the thing that gets you through, not the extra bit.

2. A predictable morning can make an unpredictable day easier to handle.

3. Sticking to the plan today does not need to feel exciting to be worth doing.

4. Structure is not a cage, it is something to lean on when things get challenging.

5. The small, boring parts of your routine are often doing more beneficial work than you realise.

6. Today might be a day to just follow the plan, even without much motivation. Just start by doing the first thing.

7. Predictability can be its own kind of comfort on a hard day. Focus on doing one thing at a time.

8. Keeping to your usual routine today is a completely reasonable goal. Just do the first thing on your list.

9. Sometimes just doing the next thing is enough.

10. A steady routine tends to help you more than people give it credit to.

Yes, I see a psychologist

- 1. It looks like you might be having a pretty difficult week, it might be worth mentioning what's going on at your next session?
- 2. Having someone qualified to talk to is worth using, not just saving for a crisis. Reach out to them if you need extra support.
- 3. A tough week is often exactly what your next appointment is for. Be honest about how you are going and feeling in your next session with your Psychologist.
- 4. It is easy to forget the small things that affected you. Write them down so you can chat with your Psychologist about it next time.
- 5. You do not need a big issue to bring something up with your psychologist.
- 6. Regular sessions work best when you are honest about what is really going on.
- 7. It looks like today has been hard, that is worth a mention next time you are seeing your Psychologist.
- 8. The small stuff between sessions is often worth raising too. So write a short list as things occur so you don't forget.
- 9. It looks like this week has been difficult for you, but you already have support in place. You deserve to use it regularly.
- 10. Whatever has been affecting you lately, your psychologist is a good person to unpack this with.

Yes, I see my GP

- 1. If you are doing it tough, don't forget that your mental health is worth raising with your GP, not just the physical stuff.
- 2. If it has been a rough patch lately, that is worth mentioning at your next check-up with your GP.
- 3. A five-minute mention to your GP can open up more support than you would expect. So please let them know how you are going.
- 4. Your GP appointments are a chance to talk about how you are going overall, not just symptoms.
- 5. It is easy to only bring up the physical stuff when you see your GP. Your Mental Health counts too.
- 6. If something has been weighing on you, your GP is a reasonable place to start talking about how to get the support you deserve.
- 7. Booking in with your GP for a general check-in is a solid move, not an overreaction.
- 8. You do not need a crisis to bring up how you have really been feeling with your GP.
- 9. Whatever has been going on, it is worth a mention next time you see your GP.

10. Your GP can only help you find the right support. Worth telling them the full picture on how you are going.

Yes, I see a counsellor

- 1. If something has been sitting with you, that is exactly what counselling is for.
- 2. Bringing the small stuff to your sessions is just as valid as the big stuff.
- 3. A tough few days is worth raising with your counsellor, not brushing past.
- 4. You do not need to have it figured out before your next session. That is the point of going to counselling.
- 5. Whatever has been on your mind lately, it is worth putting into words with your counsellor next time you see them.
- 6. Regular sessions work best when you actually bring what is real, not just what feels manageable.
- 7. If today has been harder than usual, that is worth mentioning next time you are seeing your counsellor.
- 8. You have got a space set aside to talk things through with your counsellor. Worth using it regularly.
- 9. Small shifts in how you are feeling are still worth raising, not just the big ones.
- 10. Whatever has been building, your next session is a fair place to unpack it.

Not currently, but open to it

- 1. Professional support is not just for when things fall apart. It is there whenever it would help. We can support you. Book a session with a Psychologist or Counsellor.
- 2. If you have been thinking about getting some extra help, that thought is worth taking seriously. We can support you. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.
- 3. There is no threshold you need to hit before it is worth looking into getting support. Reach out to us or your GP.
- 4. A GP appointment is often the easiest first step, if you ever want extra support.
- 5. Support does not have to mean anything intense. Sometimes it is just someone to talk to.
- 6. If today has been harder than usual, it might be worth thinking about who could help. Don't forget that we can help. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.
- 7. You do not need to wait for a crisis to reach out for extra support.
- 8. It is completely normal to look into support even when you are coping okay.
- 9. Whenever you are ready, looking into professional support is a reasonable next step. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.

10. You said you would be open to getting extra support. That door is still open. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.

No, I am managing on my own

1. Managing things yourself is one way through. Support is there too, if you ever want it.

2. There is no rule that says you have to keep doing this alone. If things are getting worse reach out to one of our Psychologist or Counsellor.

3. Coping well on your own does not mean you are not allowed extra support if you need it sometimes.

4. If things ever feel more difficult than usual, professional support is one option among others. Don't forget that we can help. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.

5. You are doing this your way, and that is fine. The option to talk to someone is still there. We are only a phone call away.

6. There is no downside to knowing what extra support looks like, even if you never end up needing it.

7. However you are getting through things, that is valid. Support is simply another tool, not a correction.

8. You do not need to be struggling to consider talking to someone. It is just an option.

9. Whatever is working for you now is enough. Just know professional support is not only for emergencies.

10. Doing it on your own is a choice, not a requirement. Worth remembering that is not the only way. Don't forget that we can help. Book a session with our Psychologist or Counsellor.
