

8 tools for your Tough Days

Small, practical things that actually help, whatever job you do.

1 Notice the loss, not just the tired

Losing interest in what you love is a sign that something else is going on, not just tiredness.

2 Mark the end of your shift

Change your shirt, put on your favourite comfy clothes, put your phone on do not disturb for a little while, maybe put some music on, anything that tells your mind the day is over, not just your body.

3 Take real breaks

Get up from your computer for two minutes, walk around, shake out your hands, stretch a little, grab some water or make a coffee or tea before you go back, it beats pushing straight through.

4 Protect the first twenty minutes home

When you get home, rest for twenty minutes before you start on chores.

5 Tell one person, not everyone

One honest chat with someone you trust does more than staying silent.

6 Schedule connection

Pick a set time each day to check in with someone, especially if your work is solitary.

7 Do something just for you

Even three minutes counts, whether it's a moment of wow, something beautiful, or something you simply enjoy, and it's not selfish.

8 Don't decide big things on a bad day

Give yourself space before quitting or walking away from anything major.

Tools for the Tough Days is a psychologist authored platform, built for people doing tough jobs.

toolsforthetoughdays.com.au

Scan for your free tips